Self-Assessment – Who Am I?

Assessing your interests and skills

Before you can plan a journey, you must know where you are currently located. This concept also applies to your career journey. To begin your career journey, one way to figure out where you are now is by asking yourself, "Who am I?"

The following statements can help you determine the starting point of your career journey. For each item, complete the statement based on your personality and interests. The goal is for you to get a clearer vision of who you are and where you want to go. Your answers do not form a concrete definition of you and your future career, but they can be a starting point for you as you begin your career journey.

If you have trouble answering the questions, go to the Personal Skills Inventory table at the end of the questionnaire. After reviewing, it you might be surprised at how skillful you are!

Use the Additional Notes section at the end of this document for any extra information you want to capture while you think about your career journey.
